Greetings from the President

Barb Soukup & Hero

Hello NODA members, friends, and families,

I hope you all managed to stay warm and visit your horse at some point, maybe even get to ride! I know I got very little done with my horse, Hero. But, we must look on the bright side. The days are getting longer and Spring is in our near future.

Speaking of Spring, our schooling shows committee has been hard at work already.

- They are working on the 2018 Schooling Shows Prize List which will be in your hands in time to motivate those that show to get to work.
- They have lined up a nice group of judges, some you have ridden for in the past and some are very new to us.
- They have your favorite show venues lined up as well, including a new location, Topline Stables in Aurora. Thank you to Janeen Langowski-Grava who generously volunteered to host a NODA Schooling Show this year at Topline Stables when one of the show venues had a conflict and was not able to host our show this year.

- With the schooling shows committee working hard on the 2018 Schooling Show Series, I would like to remind everyone that VOLUNTEERS are always needed and welcome. Remember you must have NODA schooling show volunteer hours to apply for Year-End Awards!

Speaking of Year-End Awards, we have some new awards for our Western Dressage members. Our awards committee is in the process of evaluating some awards for possible retirement, and some awards whose criteria will be clarified.

The upcoming 2018 NODA Schooling Shows Prize List will include complete 2018 NODA Year-End Awards Program information. When the prize list and awards program is published, the information will be posted on the NODA website. The Schooling Shows Prize List will be posted on the SCHOOLING shows page, and the Year-End Awards will be posted on the AWARDS pages.

Our education committee is also working on many ideas for clinics and educational opportunities. Some of the ideas under consideration are: horse trailer driving, braiding clinic, and a musical freestyle clinic. All ideas and suggestions are welcome. If you have any to share, please e-mail them to the Education Committee Co-Chairs at Marcia-Edu@nodarider.org or Elizabeth-edu@nodarider.org.

Stay tuned! All the committees are hard at work to make NODA a great GMO for all. We appreciate our membership, and hope you all know we are here for you!

Thanks for reading,
Barb Soukup

Wanted: Adult Amateur Mind in an Athlete's Body

By Jessica Harriman Austin

Maryanna Haymon and her husband, Wendell, started breeding warmblood horses in 1990. They have produced numerous FEI dressage and hunter horses who were regional and national champions. Based in Columbus, North Carolina, their breed horses at Marydell Farm.

I had the privilege of speaking with Maryanna and asked her what she would recommend for adult amateurs seeking a dressage prospect. She had several important considerations to share in: temperament, money, genetics, patience with gaits development, references for breeder.

Temperament Her first consideration and advice is to consider temperament in any horse, regardless of age. If you have a horse that does not want to do the job, there will always be an argument or a fight. This is not pleasant for horse or rider. A horse with the worst conformation who wants to do something will do it, and do it well. Temperament is part genetics, part environment. As an example, Maryanna mentioned a filly born this year out of a maiden mare. The birth was difficult, and the filly never leaves her dam's side. This filly is being taught to be timid about her environment. She has a colt who was born this year who will leave the herd to come see any human that comes to visit. She has many stories about the different personalities of foals.

Maryanna cautions that there is approximately a three-day window from when a foal is born, to see their personality. After that they become feral. Their instinct to survive kicks in for a few weeks to a few months. When evaluating a newborn foal, Maryanna considers whether they are curious about the humans going in to see them and if they are "willing to watch the world." She wants a bold and curious foal, but one that is willing to listen if she tells them to back off when teaching them to trailer or tie. They need to be willing to work with her. If they are a little independent, then they will probably will need a more advanced or experienced handler.

It is Maryanna's belief that the horse with a good temperament and personality is the best choice for an adult amateur. It does not matter if they are mares, geldings, or stallions. A patient person who will take time to develop a relationship with a mare will find a willing partner. An 'eager beaver' type of rider would do better with a gelding. On the other hand, stallions are not for everyone. But if the rider has experience dealing with stallions, they can be quite nice. Horse color is also about preference. She has noticed that many dressage riders do not want to deal with the headaches of keeping light colored horses clean, so black or darker colored horses sell more quickly.

Money A second consideration is how much money you have in your pocket right now, whether you have the cash up front to invest in a trained horse, or if you buy a foal to bring along, you are paying the same in the long run. A foal allows you to pay in installments. There is always risk in buying a young horse, risk of injury or illness. Life happens. Maryanna said horses seem to be born with a suicide wish. Buying a horse already started under saddle has risk of injury, but it is a different type of injury. But in her opinion, the benefits of buying a foal or young horse outweigh the negatives. You have the chance to put your stamp on that baby. The horse knows you and your personality, and you know that horse inside and out. You form a bond that takes years to form with an older horse. Starting when they are young, allows a line of communication that you do not have with an older horse.

Wendell & Maryanna Haymon (left) and with licensed stallion Debonair MF and Hilltop Farm head trainer, Michael Bragdel. He is the offspring from two generations of the Haymons' Grand Prix stallions,

In Maryanna's opinion, potential buyers often only look at the stallion when searching for a foal. Genetically it is a 50/50 split although she believes the mare gives 70% her environment shapes the foal from the time of conception until weaning. A nervous mom can give birth to a foal with ulcers. A good mother does not just love her foal, she disciplines the foal so that it learns how to behave. The dam's nutrition and vaccines also factor in to the physical and mental health of her offspring. She highly recommends looking at the sire and dam of a foal before purchasing it, and take into consideration the soundness and trainability.

Genetics The third consideration is genetics. Maryanna's 'go-to' bloodlines for an adult amateur are Donnerhall and Rubinstein. Because of the Don Principe daughters that she breeds, she has added in Florestan and B-line stallions, notably Bellissimo M and Belantis. Donnerhall and Rubinstein have produced a lot of hunters with smooth, even gaits and friendly temperaments. She cautions against buying a young horse with huge gaits because your trainer or friend tells you to do so. Rather, find a horse that has gaits that you as the owner will be able to ride. Maryanna has jumper bloodlines in all her horses. She feels a more open hind leg lends itself to a better and more collected piaffe and passage because there is more space to articulate, as well as lending a better jump in the canter.

Grand Prix Bred Horses Develop Gaits Slowly A fourth consideration is the understand that horses bred for Grand Prix dressage movements tend to develop their gaits more slowly. To breed for Grand Prix, you must develop these young horses slowly with long term goals in mind and be patient.

Wanted: Adult Amateur Mind in an Athlete's Body (Continued)

Maryanna is invited to young horse nationals every year, but her horses don't win at the younger ages because they develop slowly. However, by age 7 they are doing the Prix St Georges movements or competitions.

Maryanna stated that many horses competing in young horse classes statistically do not go on to be Grand Prix stars. If they eventually get to Grand Prix level, they are not usually at the top. Longer front legs with fancy front end movement sell well when riders are looking to compete in young horse classes. Not every breeder is breeding for the young horse classes. She mentioned that judges are talking about taking the coefficient off the walk because the fancy trot brings in the spectators. She says it is felt that without spectators, dressage will no longer be in the Olympics. This focus on the fancy trot is to the detriment of the horse when breeders no longer breed for correct gaits. Maryanna does not see this breeding trend changing anytime soon. To pay their bills, breeders breed what will sell, and people buy what gets high scores in the show ring.

Be Ready to Provide References Her last piece of wisdom shared, was not to be offended when a breeder asks you for references when you wish to purchase one of their horses. Breeders want the best for their foals when they sell them, and they want the new owner to be successful. After 27 years of breeding, Maryanna has had times where she has turned people away because they are not a good fit for the horse. She wants the horse and rider to BOTH be happy. When a potential owner happily offers references, this goes a long way towards demonstrating to her that you have a support system in place to raise a young horse successfully.

SERVICES

ACCOMPLISHED DRESSAGE RIDER NEEDED In search of an accomplished dressage rider in the Ravenna area to assist in riding, training and showing a lovely dark bay OTTB gelding for his upcoming 2nd summer. I have another horse to ride and show and just not enough time. This is an unpaid position but hoping to find someone who may be without a horse presently but would love to ride and help move this sweet boy forward. He's just under 17 hh and is as sweet as they come. I showed him last year in his first summer of being off the track and he did wonderfully. Private residence with covered riding arena on property. I will request references and your past showing and training experience. Must be dependable, experienced in training (not just riding and showing) and of course, personable, fun and gentle! Please call 330-606-4389.
